Course Description
This course will introduce you to the ancient discipline of rhetoric. Rhetoric impinges on public speaking, philosophy, literature, politics, economics, and religion. It involves speaking well, writing well, and being able to evaluate any kind of attempt made by others to persuade you. Throughout this course, we will examine various aspects of rhetoric, past and present, with an eye towards how we as Christians might profit from studying this ancient discipline. By reading classic examples of rhetorical compositions and writing your own rhetorical compositions (progymnasmata exercises), you will gain firsthand knowledge of this ancient and very important discipline.

Course Format
This course features two 30-minute lectures per week, which the student must listen to (and take notes on) on his or her own time, and a 1-hour interactive session at the end of each week. These sessions are the time to ask any questions that arose from the lecture, discuss the materials for that week, and / or read student compositions to the class.
